Epitaph

Death is not information.
Stone that I am,
He came into my quiet
And I shall be still for him.

On the Subject of Poetry

I do not understand the world, Father.
By the millpond at the end of the garden
There is a man who slouches listening To the wheel revolving in the stream, only There is no wheel there to revolve.

He sits in the end of March, but he sits also In the end of the garden; his hands are in His pocket. It is not expectation On which he is intent, nor yesterday
To which he listens. It is a wheel turning.

When I speak, Father, it is the world
That I must mention. He does not move His feet so much as raise his head
For fear he should disturb the sound he hears Like a pain without a cry, where he listens.

I do not think I am fond, Father,
Of the way in which always before he listens He prepares himself by listening. It is Unequal, Father, like the reason For which the wheel turns, though there is no wheel.

I speak of him, Father, because he is There with his hands in his pockets, in the end Of the garden listening to the turning Wheel that is not there, but it is the world,
Father, that I do not understand.

Burning the Cat

In the spring, by the big shuck-pile
Between the bramble-choked brook where the copperheads Curled in the first sun, and the mud road,
All at once it could no longer be ignored.
The season steamed with an odor for which There has never been a name, but it shouted above all.
When I went near, the wood-lice were in its eyes
And a nest of beetles in the white fur of its armpit.
I built a fire there by the shuck-pile
But it did no more than pop the beetles
And singe the damp fur, raising a stench
Of burning hair that bit through the sweet-day smell.
Then thinking how time leches after indecency,
Since both grief is indecent and the lack of it,
I went away and fetched newspaper,
And wrapped it in dead events, days and days, Soaked it in kerosene and put it in
With the garbage on a heaped nest of sticks:
It was harder to burn than the peels of oranges, Bubbling and spitting, and the reek was like Rank cooking that drifted with the smoke out Through the budding woods and clouded the shining dogwood.
But I became stubborn: I would consume it Though the pyre should take me a day to build
And the flames rise over the house. And hours I fed That burning, till I was black and streaked with sweat;
And poked it out then, with charred meat still clustering Thick around the bones. And buried it so As I should have done in the first place, for The earth is slow, but deep, and good for hiding;
I would have used it if I had understood How nine lives can vanish in one flash of a dog's jaws, A car, or a copperhead, and yet how one small Death, however reckoned, is hard to dispose of.

The Shipwreck

The tale is different if even a single breath Escapes to tell it. The return itself Says survival is possible. And words made to carry In quiet the burden, the isolation Of dust, and that fail even so,
Though they shudder still, must shrink the great head Of elemental violence, the vast eyes
Called blind looking into the ends of darkness,
The mouth deafening understanding with its one
All-wise syllable, into a shriveled History that the dry-shod may hold In the palms of their hands. They had her Under jib and reefed mizzen, and in the dark Were fairly sure where they were, and with sea-room, And it seemed to be slacking a little, until Just before three they struck. Heard It come home, hollow in the hearts of them,
And only then heard the bell ringing, telling them
It had been ringing there always telling them That there it would strike home, hollow, in The hearts of them. Only then heard it Over the sunlight, the dozing creak
Of the moorings, the bleaching quay, the heat,
The coiled ropes on the quay they would sail
And the day before, and across the water blue
As a sky through the heat beyond
The coils, the coils, with their shadows coiled Inside them. And it sprang upon them dark, Bitter, and heavy with sound. They began to go To pieces at once under the waves' hammer.
Sick at heart since that first stroke, they moved Nevertheless as they had learned always to move

When it should come, not weighing hope against The weight of the water, yet knowing that no breath Would escape to betray what they underwent then.
Dazed to, incredulous, that it had come,
That they could recognize it. It was too familiar,
And they in the press of it, therefore, as though
In a drifting dream. But it bore upon them Bursting slowly inside them where they had Coiled it down, coiled it down: this sea, it was Blind, yes, as they had said, and treacherous—They had used their own traits to character it—but without Accident in its wildness, in its rage, Utterly and from the beginning without Error. And to some it seemed that the waves Grew gentle, spared them, while they died of that knowledge.

Fog-Horn

Surely that moan is not the thing That men thought they were making, when they Put it there, for their own necessities.
That throat does not call to anything human
But to something men had forgotten,
That stirs under fog. Who wounded that beast Incurably, or from whose pasture
Was it lost, full grown, and time closed round it With no way back? Who tethered its tongue
So that its voice could never come
To speak out in the light of clear day,
But only when the shifting blindness Descends and its acknowledged among us, As though from behind a wall, always Nearer that we had remembered? If it Was we who gave tongue to this cry
What does it bespeak in us, repeating
And repeating, insisting on something That we never meant? We only put it there To give warning of something we dare not Ignore, lest we should come upon it Too suddenly, recognize it too late,
As our cries were swallowed up and all hands lost.

Portland Going Out

Early that afternoon, as we keep Remembering, the water of the harbor
Was so smooth you wanted to walk on it,
It looked that trustworthy: glassy and black Like one of those pools they have in the lobbies Of grand hotels. And, thinking back, we say That the same bells we had heard telling
Their shoals and hours since we were children, Sounded different, as though they were Moving about the business of strangers. By Five it was kicking up quite a bit,
And the greasiest evening you ever saw,
We had just come in, and were making fast,
A few minutes to seven, when she went Down the harbor behind us, going out, Passing so close over our stern that we Caught the red glow of her port light for A moment on our faces. Only When she was gone did we notice That it was starting to snow. No, we were Not the last, nor even nearly the last
To see her. A schooner that lived through it Glimpsed her, at the height of the storm,
In a clear patch, apparently riding it;
That must have been no more than minutes Before she went down. We had known storms Before, almost as brutal, and wrecks before Almost as unexplained, almost As disastrous. Yet we keep asking How it happened, how, and why Blanchard sailed, Miscalculating the storm's course. But what We cannot even find questions for

Is how near we were: brushed by the same snow, Lifted by her wake as she passed. We could Have spoken, we swear, with anyone on her deck,
And not had to raise our voices, if we Had known anything to say. And now In no time at all, she has put All of disaster between us: a gulf Beyond reckoning. It begins where we are.

Grandmother Dying

Not ridden in her Christian bed, either,
But her wrenched back bent double, hunched over The plank tied to the arms of her rocker
With a pillow on it to keep her head Sideways up from her knees, and three others Behind her in the high chair to hold her Down so the crooked might be straight, as if There was any hope. Who for ninety-three years, Keeping the faith, believed you could get Through the strait gate and the needle's eye if You made up your mind straight and narrow, kept
The thread tight and, deaf to both left and to right To the sly music beyond the ditches, beat Time on the Book as you went. And then she fell.
She should have did what she was told, she should Have called for what she needed, she did look Sleeping on the pillows and to be trusted
Just for a bit, and Bid was not downstairs
A minute before hearing the hall creak
And the door crash back in the bathroom as She fell. What was it, eighteen months, they took Care of her crooked that way, feeding from The side, hunching down to hear her, all Knowing full well what the crooked come to When their rockers stop. Still could hear what she Thought good to hear, still croak: You keep my Candy hid in that sweater drawer, Bid,
Only for company one piece, then you put it Back again, hear? One after the other A family of fevers visited her,
And last a daughter-in-law with a nasty Cough combed her hair out pretty on the plank,
With a flower in it, and held a mirror

For her to see till it made her smile, But Bid, she whispered, you keep wide of that new Nurse's cough, she has TB. And where Were the wars that still worried her, when Most were dead a long time ago, and one Son had come back and was there hanging In sunlight, in a medal of glory, on The wall in her room smelling of coal-gas
And petunias. One daughter lived and dusted A nice brick house a block away, already Rehearsing how she'd say, "Well, we was always Good to our mumma anyway." Outside The crooked river flowed easy, knowing All along; the tracks smiled and rang away;
Help would come from the hills. one knotted hand
Of hers would hang up in the air above
Her head for hours, propped on its elbow, waving In that direction. And when she heaved up Her last breath, to shake it like a fist, As out of a habit so old as to be Nearly absent, at the dirty river Sliding always there the same as ever, Came a black engine that had been waiting Up the tracks there for ninety-four years, and With its hooting downriver, making the tracks Staighen out in front of it like a whip,
While the windows rattled loud to break, the things
On the shelves shook, the folds of her face jarred
And shivered; and when it was gone, for a long Time the goosed laundry still leaped and jiggled In the smutty wind outside, and her chair went on Rocking all by itself with nothing alive
Inside it to explain it, nothing, nothing.

The Drunk in the Furnace

For a good decade
The furnace stood in the naked gully, fireless And vacant as any hat. Then when it was No more to them than a hulking black fossil To erode unnoticed with the rest of the junk-hill
By the poisonous creek, and rapidly to be added To their ignorance,

They were afterwards astonished
To confirm, one more, a twist of smoke like a pale Resurrection, staggering out of its chewed hole,
And to remark then other tokens that someone,
Cosily bolted behind the eyeholed iron Door of the drafty burner, had there established His bad castle.

Where he gets his spirits
It's a mystery. But the stuff keeps him musical:
Hammer-and-anviling with poker and bottle
To his jugged bellowings, till the last groaning clang
As he collapses onto the rioting Springs of a litter of car seats ranged on the grates,
To sleep like an iron pig.

In their tar-paper church
On a text about stoke holes that are sated never Their Reverend lingers. They nod and hate trespassers.
When the furnace wakes, though all afternoon
Their witless offspring flock like piped rats to its siren Crescendo, and agape on the crumbling ridge Stand in a row and learn.

Air

Naturally it is night.
Under the overturned lute with its One string I am going my way Which has a strange sound.

This way the dust, that way the dust.
I listen to both sides
But I keep right on.
I remember the leaves sitting in judgment
And then winter.

I remember the rain with its bundle of roads.
The rain taking all its roads.
Nowhere.

Young as I am, old as I am,

I forget tomorrow, the blind man.
I forget the life among the buried windows.
The eyes in the curtains.
The wall
Growing through the immortelles.
I forget silence
The owner of the smile.

This must be what I wanted to be doing,
Walking at night between the two deserts, Singing.

The Last One

Well they'd made up their minds to be everywhere because why not.
Everywhere was theirs because they thought so.
They with two leaves they whom the birds despise.
In the middle of stones they made up their minds.
They started to cut.

Well they cut everything because why not.
Everything was theirs because they thought so.
It fell into its shadows and they took both away.
Some to have some for burning.

Well cutting everything they came to the water.
They came to the end of the day there was one left standing.
They would cut it tomorrow they went away.
The night gathered in the last branches.
The shadow of the night gathered in the shadow on the water.
The night and the shadow put on the same head.
And it said Now.

Well in the morning they cut the last one.
Like the others the last one fell into its shadow.
It fell into its shadow on the water.
They took it away its shadow stayed on the water.

Well they shrugged they started trying to get the shadow away.
They cut right to the ground the shadow stayed whole.
They laid boards on it the shadow came out on top.

They shone lights on it the shadow got blacker and clearer.
They exploded the water the shadow rocked.
They built a huge fire on the roots.
They sent up black smoke between the shadow and the sun.
The new shadow flowed without changing the old one.
They shrugged they went away to get stones.

They came back the shadow was growing.
They started setting up stones it was growing.
They looked the other way it went on growing.
They decided they would make a stone out of it.
They took stones to the water they poured them into the shadow.
They poured them in they poured them in the stones vanished.
The shadow was not filled it went on growing.
That was one day.

The next day was just the same it went on growing.
They did all the same things it was just the same.
They decided to take its water from under it.
They took away water they took it away the water went down.
The shadow stayed where it was before.
It went on growing it grew onto the land.
They started to scrape the shadow with machines.
When it touched the machines it stayed on them.
They started to beat the shadow with sticks.
Where it touched the sticks it stayed on them.
They started to beat the shadow with hands.
Where it touched the hands it stayed on them.
That was another day.

Well the next day started about the same it went on growing.
They pushed lights into the shadow.
Where the shadow got onto them they went out.
They began to stomp on the edge it got their feet.
And when it got their feet they fell down.
It got into eyes the eyes went blind.

The ones that fell down it grew over and they vanished.
The ones that went blind and walked into vanished.
The ones that could see and stood still It swallowed their shadows.
Then it swallowed them too and they vanished.
Well the others ran.

The ones that were left went away to live if it would let them.
They went as far as they could.
The lucky ones with their shadows.

It is March

It is March and black dust falls out of the books Soon I will be gone
The tall spirit who lodged here has Left already
On the avenues the colorless thread lies under Old prices

When you look back there is always the past
Even when it has vanished
But when you look forward
With your dirty knuckles and the wingless Bird on your shoulder
What can you write

The bitterness is still rising in the old mines
The fist is coming out of the egg
The thermometers out of the mouth of the corpses

At a certain height
The tails of the kites for a moment are Covered with footsteps

Whatever I have to do has not yet begun

Wish

The star in my Hand is falling

All the uniforms know what's no use

May I bow to Necessity not To her hirelings

River of Bees

In a dream I returned to the river of bees Five orange trees by the bridge and Beside two mills my house Into whose courtyard a blindman followed The goats and stood singing
Of what was older

Soon it will be fifteen years

He was old he will have fallen into his eyes

I took my eyes
A long way to the calendars
Room after room asking how shall I live

One of the ends is made of streets
One man processions carry through it Empty bottles their Image of hope
It was offered to me by name

Once once and once
In the same city I was born Asking what shall I say

He will have fallen into his mouth
Men think they are better than grass

I return to his voice rising like a forkful of hay

He was old he is not real nothing is real Nor the noise of death drawing water

We are the echo of the future

On the door it says what to do to survive
But we were not born to survive
Only to live

December Night

The cold slope is standing in darkness
But the south of the trees is dry to the touch

The heavy limbs climb into the moonlight bearing feathers I came to watch these White plants older at night
The oldest Come first to the ruins

And I hear magpies kept awake by the moon
The water flows through its Own fingers without end

Tonight once more
I find a single prayer and it is not for me

A Scale in May

Now all my teachers are dead except silence
I am trying to read what the five poplars are writing on the void

Of all the beasts to man alone death brings justice
But I desire
To kneel in a doorway empty except for the song

Who made time provided also its fools Strapped in watches and with ballots for their choices Crossing the frontiers of invisible kingdoms

To succeed consider what is as though it were past Deem yourself inevitable and take credit for it If you find you no longer believe enlarge the temple

Through the day the nameless stars keep passing the door
That have come all that way out of death Without questions

The walls of light shudder and an owl wakes in the heart
I cannot call upon words
The sun goes away to set elsewhere

Before nightfall colorless petals blow under the door
And the shadows
Recall their ancestors in the house beyond death

At the end of its procession through the snow Falling
the water remembers to laugh

For the Anniversary of My Death

Every year without knowing it I have passed the day
When the last fires will wave to me
And the silence will set out Tireless traveler
Like the beam of a lightless star

Then I will no longer Find myself in life as in a strange garment Surprised at the earth
And the love of one woman
And then shamelessness of men
As today writing after three days of rain Hearing the wren sing and the falling cease And bowing not knowing to what

In the Winter of My Thirty-Eighth Year

It sounds convincing to say When I was young Though I have long wondered what it would be like To be me now
No older at all it seems from here
As far from myself as ever

Waking in fog and rain and seeing nothing
I imagine all the clocks have died in the night
Now no one is looking I could choose my age
It would be younger I suppose so I am older
It is there at hand I could take it Except for the things I think I would do differently
They keep coming between they are what I am
They have taught me little I did not know when I was young

There is nothing wrong with my age now probably It is how I have come to it Like a thing I kept putting off as I did my youth

There is nothing the matter with speech
Just because it lent itself
To my uses
Of course there is nothing the matter with the stars
It is my emptiness among them
While they drift farther away in the invisible morning

Looking for Mushrooms

for Jean and Bill Arrowsmith

When it is not yet day
I am walking on centuries of dead chestnut leaves
In a place without grief
Though the oriole
Out of another life warns me
That I am awake

In the dark while the rain fell
The gold chanterelles pushed through a sleep that was not mine Waking me
So that I came up the mountain to find them

Where they appear it seems I have been before I recognize their haunts as though remembering Another life

Where else am I walking even now Looking for me

Now It Is Clear

Now it is clear to me that no leaves are mine no roots are mine that wherever I go I will be a spine of smoke in the forest and the forest will know it we will both know it and that birds vanish because of something that I remember flying through me as though I were a great wind as the stones settle into the ground the trees into themselves staring as though I were a great wind which is what I pray for it is clear to me that I cannot return but that some of us will meet once more even here like our own statues and some of us still later without names and some of us will burn with the speed of endless departures and be found and lost no more

End of Summer

High above us a chain of white buckets full of old light going home now even the things that we do reach us after long journeys and we have changed

The Unwritten

Inside this pencil crouch words that have never been written never been spoken never been taught

they're hiding

they're awake in there dark in the dark hearing us
but they won't come out not for love not for time not for fire even when the dark has worn away they'll still be there hiding in the air multitudes in days to come may walk through them breathe them be none the wiser

what script can it be that they won't unroll in what language would I recognize it would I be able to follow it to make out the real names of everything

maybe there aren't many it could be that there's only one word and it's all we need it's here in this pencil

every pencil in the world is like this

Exercise

First forget what time it is for an hour do it regularly every day

then forget what day of the week it is do this regularly for a week then forget what country you are in and practice doing it in company for a week
then do them together
for a week
with as few breaks as possible

follow these by forgetting to add or to subtract it makes no difference you can change them around after a week
both will help you later to forget how to count forget how to count starting with your own age starting with how to count backward starting with even numbers starting with Roman numerals starting with fractions of Roman numerals starting with the old calendar going on to the old alphabet going on to the alphabet until everything is continuous again go on to forgetting elements starting with water proceeding to earth rising in fire

forget fire

Passage

In autumn in this same life
I was leaving a capital where an old animal captured in its youth one that in the wild would never have reached such an age was watching the sun set over nameless unapproachable trees and it is spring

Yesterday

My friend says I was not a good son you understand I say yes I understand

he says I did not go to see my parents very often you know and I say yes I know even when I was living in the same city he says maybe I would go there once a month or maybe even less I say oh yes

he says the last time I went to see my father I say the last time I went to see my father he says the last time I saw my father he was asking me about my life how I was making out and he went into the next room to get something to give me oh I say feeling again the cold of my father's hand the last time he says and my father turned in the doorway and saw me look at my wristwatch and he said you know I would like you to stay and talk with me

oh yes I say

but if you are busy he said I don't want you to feel that you have to just because I'm here

I say nothing

he says my father said maybe you have important work you are doing or maybe you should be seeing somebody I don't want to keep you

I look out the window my friend is older than I am he says and I told my father it was so and I got up and left him then you know

though there was nowhere I had to go and nothing I had to do

Berryman

I will tell you what he told me in the years just after the war as we then called the second world war

don't lose your arrogance he said you can do that when you're older lose it too soon and you may merely replace it with vanity just one time he suggested changing the usual order of the same words in a line of verse why point out a thing twice he suggested I pray to the Muse get down on my knees and pray right there in the corner and he said he meant it literally it was in the days before the beard and the drink but he was deep in tides of his own through which he sailed chin sideways and head tilted like a tacking sloop

he was far older than the dates allowed for much older than I was he was in his thirties he snapped down his nose with an accent I think he had affected in England as for publishing he advised me to paper my wall with rejection slips his lips and the bones of his long fingers trembled with the vehemence of his views about poetry

he said the great presence that permitted everything and transmuted it in poetry was passion passion was genius and he praised movement and invention

I had hardly begun to read I asked how can you ever be sure that what you write is really any good at all and he said you can't you can't you can never be sure you die without knowing whether anything you wrote was any good if you have to be sure don't write

Native Trees

Neither my father nor my mother knew the names of the trees where I was born what is that I asked and my father and mother did not hear they did not look where I pointed surfaces of furniture held the attention of their fingers and across the room they could watch walls they had forgotten where there were no questions no voices and no shade

Were there trees where they were children where I had not been I asked were there trees in those places where my father and my mother were born and in that time did my father and my mother see them and when they said yes it meant they did not remember What were they I asked what were they but both my father and my mother said they never knew

For the Departure of a Stepson

You are going for a long time and nobody knows what to expect we are trying to learn not to accompany gifts with advice or to suppose that we can protect you from being changed

by something that we do not know but have always turned away from even by the sea that we love with its breaking and the dissolving days and the shadows on the wall together we look at the young trees we read the news we smell the morning we cannot tell you what to take with you in your light baggage

On the Back of the Boarding Pass

In the airport by myself I forget where I am that is the way they are made over and over at such cost the ripped halls lengthening through stretches of echoes I have forgotten what day it is in this light what time it could be this was the same morning in which I mislaid the two timepieces they may turn up again timepieces can be bought but not the morning the waking into the wish to stay and the vanishing constants I keep returning to this was the morning of mending the fence where the black dog followed the water in after the last cloudburst and I kept on trying to tie a thread around the valley where we live I was making knots to hold it there in its place without changing as though this were the waking this seeming this passage this going through

Green Fields

By this part of the century few are left who believe in the animals for they are not there in the carved parts of them served on plates and the pleas from the slatted trucks are sounds of shadows that possess no future there is still game for the pleasure of killing and there are pets for the children but the lives that followed courses of their own other than ours and older have been migrating before us some are already far on the way and yet Peter with his gaunt cheeks and point of white beard the face of an aged Lawrence Peter who had lived on from another time and country and who had seen so many things set out and vanish still believed in heaven and said he had never once doubted it since his childhood on the farm in the days of the horses he had not doubted it in the worst times of the Great War and afterward and he had come to what he took to be a kind of earthly model of it as he wandered south in his sixties by that time speaking the language well enough for them to make him out he took the smallest roads into a world he thought was a thing of the past with wildflowers he scarcely remembered and neighbors working together scything the morning meadows turning the hay before the noon meal bringing it in by milking time husbandry and abundance all the virtues he admired and their reward bounteous in the eyes of a foreigner and there he remained for the rest of his days seeing what he wanted to see until the winter when he could no longer fork the earth in his garden and then he gave away his house land everything and committed himself to a home to die in an old chateau where he lingered for some time surrounded by those who had lost the use of body or mind and as he lay there he told me that the wall by his bed opened almost every day and he saw what was really there and it was eternal life as he recognized at once when he saw the gardens he had made and the green fields where he had been a child and his mother was standing there then the wall would close and around him again were the last days of the world

Waves in August

There is a war in the distance with the distance growing smaller the field glasses laying at hand are for keeping it far away

I thought I was getting better about that returning childish wish to be living somewhere else that I knew was impossible and now I find myself wishing to be here to be alive here it is impossible enough to still be the wish of a child in youth I hid a boat under the bushes beside the water knowing I would want it later and come back and find it there someone else took it and left me instead the sound of the water with its whisper of vertigo terror reassurance an old old sadness it would seem we knew enough always about parting but we have to go on learning as long as there is anything

Before the Flood

Why did he promise me that we would build ourselves an ark all by ourselves out in back of the house on New York Avenue in Union City New Jersey to the singing of the streetcars after the story of Noah whom nobody believed about the waters that would rise over everything when I told my father I wanted us to build an ark of our own there in the back yard under the kitchen could we do that he told me that we could I want to I said and will we he promised me that we would why did he promise that I wanted us to start then nobody will believe us I said that we are building an ark because the rains are coming and that was true nobody ever believed we would build an ark there nobody would believe that the waters were coming

The Summer

After we come to see it and know we scarcely live without it we begin trying to describe what art is and it seems to be something we believe is human whatever that is something that says what we are but then the same beam of recognition stops at one penguin choosing a pebble to offer to the penguin he hopes to love and later the dance of awkwardness holding an egg on one foot away from the snow of summer the balancing on one foot in the flash of summer

Wings

Among my friends here is an old man named for the first glimpse of light before daybreak he teaches flying that is to say he is able to fly himself and has taught others to fly and for them it is their only treasure but he has not taught me though I dream of flying I fly in dreams but when I see him he tells me of plants he has saved for me and where they come from a new one each time they have leaves like wings like many wings some with wings like whole flocks but they never fly he says or almost never though there are some that can and do but when they fly it is their only treasure he says that if he taught me how to fly it would be one treasure among others just one among others is what he says and he will wait he tells me and he speaks of his old friends instead and their meetings at intervals at a place where they fought a battle long ago when they were young and won and the ancient forest there was destroyed as they fought but when they return it rises again to greet them as though no harm had ever come to it and while they are there it spreads its wings over them

The Name of the Air

It could be like that then the beloved old dog finding it harder and harder to breathe and understanding but coming to ask whether there is something that can be done about it coming again to ask and then standing there without asking

To the Grass of Autumn

You could never believe it would come to this one still morning when before you noticed the birds already were all but gone

even though year upon year the rehearsal of it must have surprised your speechless parents and unknown antecedents long ago gathered to dust and though even the children have been taught to say the word witherith

no you were known to be cool and countless the bright vision on all the green hills rippling in unmeasured waves through the days in flower

now you are as the fog that sifts among you gray in the chill daybreak the voles scratch the dry earth around your roots hoping to find something before winter
and when the white air stirs you whisper to yourselves without expectation or the need to know

The Odds

His first winter in that city after years in the north a friend wrote to me of how people there were dealing with the cold he told me that crews were digging up the avenue down at the corner all day the men keeping a fire going in an old oil drum with holes down the sides and feeding it whatever turned up and he had been watching two men by the barrel with three gloves between them passing one glove back and forth while they stamped their feet and he had tried to tell whether it was a right or a left glove
